

operation, the GA's quorum recalls, proposes and selects by vote, among pre-qualified candidates, the new members of the BoD.

The inner feedback spirals on Fig. 1 show that the quorum of the GA, CSSC's chief or principal archon, sends its collegiate decisions for implementation to the BoD. The BoD, which always acts as the GA's agent, implements all GA's collegiate decisions, after consulting all BoD members.

When there are obstacles, however, or under extenuating circumstances, critical to CSSC's survival, then the BoD has the option to veto GA's collegiate decisions. So, occasionally, exercising its veto, the BoD can send GA's collegiate decisions back to the GA for review and amendments.

In order to comply with extant legislation, the BoD consists of the President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Public-Relations archon and Legal Adviser. According to the structure of the central government of Helvetia, officially Confederatio Helvetica or Switzerland, to the design of which contributed the brutally murdered governor of Hellas, Ioannis Kapodistrias, CSSC's BoD incorporates a team of 6 (six) Presidents, elected by vote by the GA quorum, who alternate by rotation every 2 (two) months and are responsible for the uptake of by-consensus only decisions, i.e., not by vote.

The team of the 6 (six) alternating Presidents, rotating bimonthly, functions as a second safety valve against political corruption. Political corruption, an integral part of the pyramidal (Δ) structure of the despotic, pseudo-aristocratic or swanky regime of the tyrannical particracy, was introduced to the protectorate 'Greece' by the pioneers of its tyrannical particracy: the exponent of british interests and mouthpiece of the Turks, Alexander Mavrokordatos, and the so-called «tzitzile-fitzile» John Kolettis, founder of the Party of Fustanella or French Party.

Hellenic politeia's sovereign, spherically-structured ruling posts and other business institutions are not utopian. The collegiate-decisions flowchart on Fig. 1 is based on Aristotle's description, in his Politics book, of the collegiate-decisions flow within the spherically-structured politeias of the Cretans, Spartans, Syracusans and other Hellenes, where:

GA = 'Ἀπέλλα' or Apella, BoD = 'Γερουσία' or Senate and CC = 'οἱ Ἐφοροί' or the Ephors.

Those crafty Hellenes collegially created the conditions necessary for their hellenic politeia to emerge, without any access to political-science texts. But you already have the flowchart of their collegiate decisions on Fig. 1.

As long as we collegially wish it, also collegially we can create the conditions necessary for politeia to reemerge, as a high-technology human system. After all, are we not as crafty today as those Hellenes were?

Perhaps it is high-time we realized that, without rendering obsolete the pyramidal (Δ) hierarchy of the swanky regime of the tyrannical particracy, which promotes only decay and violence, it will never be possible to see any different results. Politeia's sovereign, spherically-structured ruling posts and institutions can work only along the proposed spherical structure of a CSSC (Fig. 1).

Only in this manner can the virtuous, i.e., the actively-participating true citizens, collegially create and hence collegially thrive toward our common, and hence our personal, eudaimonia. The question is: do we wish to make it so collegially?
